You are invited to the
NYLXS
1st Annual Dinner
celebrating a year of accomplishment

Date: January 24th, 2002
Place:

Guest Speakers:
Richard Stallman: Founder of the Free Software Institute, head of project GNU

Don Marti: Editor of the (GNU) "Linux Journal" and free software advocate

Dinner Costs: $75 per seat

All Funds are being given to the development of the Free Software Institute. NYC's member to member free software training service
RSVP

NYLXS is a volunteer organization, located in Brooklyn and Manhattan, forming a non-profit corporation, for the advancement and education of the public in the use of Free Software. Free Software is a collaborative effort to produce software in an open and free manner without hindering the end user or other programmers with restrictions which jeopardizing the freedom of the computer user as they use digital devices for day to day communication, education and business needs. GNU/Linux is an example of Free Software.

NYLXS has provided training, lectures, installation assistance, government presentations, advice, personnel, demonstrations and support for users in the Free Software community since November of 2001. We have trained over 300 individuals in the use of Free Software, held 2 business demonstrations, provided 7 professional lectures on Free Software development, published 4 journals, established a weekly internet radio show, provided other Free Software organizations resources on the internet and around town, presented to the European Union a speech on inclusion of the public in the development of software and computer design, helped public schools use and install free software in their institutions for the benefit of their students and many other activities in support of the NYC GNU/Linux and Free Software scene.