I have been a member of this forum since 2008. Nothing I have heard from Fingleaf suggests that he is in any way racist or anti-Semitic

Well, now you have.

and certainly not in any way a Holocaust-denier.

Then he owes me and the general public an apology.

He has a Chinese wife and Kazakh in-laws. He himself was born in Amsterdam, not too long after the Second World War. And astonishingly, he personally knew Miep Gies, the woman who tried to save the Frank family. More astonishingly yet, he also knew Otto Frank, the father of Anne, after Otto had survived the concentration / extermination camps.

I don't care. I care about the inappropriate things he said. What he said was the misappropriation of statistics to create a false comparison. It is a LIE to say that the Jews weren't annihilated, and it is a lie to say that the Final Solution in the Netherlands should be understood in light that most people that died in the Netherlands in WWII wasn't Jewish, as if that should make the genocide any less significant, and ruthless, and that the Final Solution was just part and parcel of what would be normal to expect in a war, as if it was just another data point.

There was NOTHING left of Jewish Culture in the Netherlands after WWII. Nearly the entire Jewish community now in Amsterdam is from Israel, and there is almost no trace of Jewish life outside of Amsterdam.

It is also wrong to have moved this from the original thread that spawned it. I simply asked how he survived when the Final Solution was so efficient in the Netherlands. The response was a lecture about the Holocaust, an inappropriate one, and on a topic I am intimately familiar with, not from books, but from family members and the members of the community who survived in and lost their entire families and suffered from the trauma for their entire lives.

I suppose you have had a strictly religious education. I haven't. My moral values are nevertheless just as good as yours, but they are different. I go by facts, figures and logic and I have shown you that the figures are from a good source. You have shown only emotion, sentiment and a total lack of understanding of a different approach than yours and you haven't posted a single figure that questions mine.

Your posts have been moved here because of your wild outbursts, based on nothing concrete. If you refuse to accept facts and figures, you may not expect that your emotional arguments have credibility.

Your latest posts are against one of the few rules this site has: "no personal attacks". Since you do not calm down and become more agitated in every post, I have closed this thread.

NOT acceptable. The thread was talking about WWII victory on the coin that the post was of Holocaust survivors that were freed, among OTHER images that were more iconic of the VE Day. It was ON TOPIC. This is not a good trend.

It is not logical to compare the rounding up and sending to cermatorias every Jew that they could lay hands on in the netherlands to the mortality data for the general population during WWII. That is not logical.

It is also not logical to remove images f the end of WWII from the thread discussing the design faults of a coin celebrating the end of WWII, especially since the current design was terrible in that it was not obviously descriptive of the subject. Freed Holocaust survivors though would be spot on and obvious for the coin.

These acts are personal attacks and against forum rules. Anything that disparaged the memory of the Holocaust and sweeps it under the rug is a personal attack.

For the record, the mortality figures are of war victims, not general mortality figures

For the record, the coin is British. There was no persecution of jews in the UK during the second world war. The post was offensive to UK members.

Further posts implicitly or explicitly asserting that the only thing that matters about the second world war is the holocaust will be deleted altogether.

Live up to this: Facts always trump convictions on World of coins. You received a link to this thread when your membership application was approved. For the record: these rules apply to everyone, including to supporters of the Palestinian cause, also on this site. You are not persecuted here and there is nothing personal about this.
